Both inner and outer tanks are made of the best charcoal iron, and are tested at a hydraulic pressure of 100 lbs. to the square inch. The outer tank and Digester are also fastened together at frequent intervals, at their tops, bottoms and sides, by stay-bolts. The two tanks thus united in one, constitute the major part of the apparatus, and will now be termed the Rendering Tank. The Rendering Tank is supported upon cast-iron legs, one of which, is shown at E. Underneath is the furnace, with the fire-door and draft-door at F F. The heats and products of combustion pass from under the bottom of the...
