Not illustrated. 1907 Excerpt: . . . the less homeopathic, even if we should, at times, prescribe compounds and administer remedies from an empirical standpoint. From the present situation of affairs there can be no question as to the foresight of Huflander, in his predictions nearly one hundred years ago, when he said there will be a gradual amalgamation of the more liberal members of the two schools. And if the philosophical reasoning, not by extremes but by golden means, is true, and via this route Ave attain the highest state of perfection, is it not a mark in favor of homeopathy to have a graduate from the dominant school use even one remedy and use it homeopathically Should we have in our makeup an ambition to show what we can do with homeopathic remedies prescribed in accordance with the law or is it better for the cause to clothe ourselves with an...
