The nitrogen and the argon are inactive gases, and hence produce practically no changes in the formation of the earth. The oxygen, watery vapor, and carbonic acid gas are active in producing chemical changes in the rock. They are also active in producing vegetable and animal growth, and the vegetable and animal material in turn decomposes and forms ammonia and organic gases and acids, which assist the elements in the air in the work of decomposing the rocks and changing the surface of the earth. 5.
