RareBooksClub. Paperback. Book Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. Paperback. 102 pages. Original publisher: Washington, DC: Office of the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition, Technology, and Logistics, 2006-2007 OCLC Number: (OCoLC)156951006 Subject: United States -- Defenses -- Technological innovations. Excerpt: . . . 8 I C H A P T E R 2 September 11, 2001, drastically changed the strategic thinking of the Department of Defense, while S and T approaches have remained stuck in the 1980s. It is of immense importance that DODs current proactive approach to strategies, plans, and programs be accompanied by a proactive technology enterprise that is refocused to address the current strategic environment and its compelling new challenges. The Joint Capabilities Integration Development System (JCIDS) was created to replace the previous service-specific requirements-generation system, which was widely seen as having created redundancies in capabilities and failed to meet the combined needs of the combatant commanders who actually employ the capabilities provided by the 2 services, Special Operations Command, and the defense agencies. As the JCIDS process is struggling to evolve into an effective system, the current strategic technology planning process is still criticized as simply compiling a list of service technology programs and not an enterprise strategic plan. Additionally, it is not informed by, nor does it effectively inform, the JCIDS requirement process. Strategic technology planning is the responsibility of the DDR and E in the role of principal staff advisor to the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition, Technology, and Logistics (USD AT and L). The DDR and E staff of approximately 60 people has the following responsibilities: develop strategies and supporting plansconduct analyses and studiesdevelop policiesprovide technical leadership, oversight, and advicemake recommendationsissue guidancerecommend approval, modification, or disapproval of programs and projects 2. Appendix E contains more detailed explanat.
